

All Sochi residents have to make their homes presentable just before the Winter Olympics in 2014. Cardiovascular outcomes of Viagra and ideas for its use viagra 2013 . Always talk to your doctor or healthcare specialist for medical advice

viagra 20mg

A final one was very beneficial, steel solid and lasting

generic viagra

·
argaiv1096

Those who fail to renovate facades and fences to the required standard will be fined 200,000 rubles.

The authorities hope this will result in Sochi's main tourist areas having a unified architectural style – 308 city streets are affected.

Local people and companies will have to renovate their property at their own expense. The only help they will receive will be cheap loans from the city.

This is not the only problem that the residents of Sochi have to face ahead of the Olympics.

The people of Sochi are also going to learn English whether they like it or not. English words and short phrases, together with their translations, have appeared all over town – from billboards and plasma screens to shops and public transport.

Locals will pick up 662 words before the games begin. City officials say that an average resident will come across each new word five times a day.

They must learn how to say "hello" and "goodbye," as well as how to give directions in English. The first word they learned was "welcome."